Our History

Built in 1849 by architect Mr. Walkinshaw, Rosslea Hall was inspired by his deep love for Italy. He designed the house in an Italianate style, choosing a location on the shores that reminded him of the Bay of Naples. To this day, with its distinctive bell tower still visible from the Rhu peninsula, Rosslea Hall retains that Italian charm.

The house was home to the Dennistoun family until 1923, when it was sold to Mr. R.G. Service, who lived there until 1947. During the war years, however, it was requisitioned by the Royal Air Force's Experimental Station for sea planes. From 1948 to 1973, the house passed through various tenants and, sadly, fell into disrepair. In 1973, Mr. John Dick purchased the property and lovingly restored it, preserving the iconic bell tower and front façade, transforming it into the hotel we know today.

To this day, our management and staff continue to uphold the tradition of impeccable attention to detail and quality service—hallmarks of a by-gone era that have helped Rosslea Hall Hotel flourish.
